

A b s t r a c t :

A method for detecting the condition of an organism through the measurement of peptides from a sample of said organism containing high- and low-molecular weight peptides, as an indication of the condition of said organism, wherein

- low-molecular weight peptides are directly detected and characterized; and
- related to a reference.